Your Caddie and You

He's a manly little fellow, and his eye is swift and keen,
And it's good to see him smiling when you come up to the green;
And it's good to hear him saying when you've got a rotten lie,
"I'm certain you can make it, sir!" It keeps your spirit high.
He is with you every minute, on the smooth and in the rough,
And your caddie's quick to sense it if you're made of proper stuff.
You can't expect a caddie to be good if you are bad;
It's human to reflect the sort of company we've had.
Associations mark us with the stamps we can't erase;
They are noted in our manners, and they're read in every face.
A boy that's trained in error isn't likely to be true,
And your caddie's but the picture and the counterpart of you.
If you bear your trials bravely, if you do the best you can,
You will find the little fellow trying hard to be a man.
If you show the proper spirit when you meet misfortune grim
You'll be making a courageous and plucky chap of him.
But if you are overbearing, and the speech of truce employ,
You are ruining the morals and the manhood of the boy.
You can't expect your caddie to be smiling and serene
If in all your dealings with him you are arrogant and mean.
He's a manly little fellow and he wants to do what's right,
But he's quick to sense injustice and his breast is full of fight.
So remember when he doesn't always do as he should do,
And you find that he is careless, that the fault may lie with you.
